Course Description

This course is intended to be a study of the United States Constitution, who wrote it, what caused it to be written, and the purpose for which it was written. The Presidency, Congress, and the judicial branch are examined as to how each impacts the lives of individuals today.

1. Course Goals

- 1.1 Individuals will read, discuss, and understand the provisions of the United States Constitution.
- 1.2 Individuals will survey the governmental and political institutions at the national level, which are based on that constitution and the political environment within which they function.
- 1.3 Individuals will understand the election process.
- 1.4 Individuals will be introduced to the basic political institutions and processes of American government.

2. Competencies

Upon satisfactory completion of this course, the student will be able to:

- 2.1 Become familiar with the major institutions of government in the United States including the executive, legislative, and judicial branches.
- 2.2 Understand the nature, extent, and quality of citizen participation in political life and the socio-political environment in which it functions.
- 2.3 Be able to discuss the impact of various features of the American political institutions, including political parties and interest groups.
- 2.4 Be able to discuss the critical domestic issues in American society and the ways in which government deals with them.
- 2.5 Be able to understand the function of government.
